Questions of Strategy As Griffin Has Surgery

By JUDY BATTISTA

Washington Redskins quarterback Robert Griffin III had two knee ligaments surgically repaired Wednesday — including a reconstruction of the anterior cruciate ligament and a repair of a tear in the lateral collateral ligament — the result of a knee injury he sustained during Sunday's playoff loss to the Seattle Seahawks.

The injury puts the availability of Griffin, a leading candidate for rookie of the year honors, in doubt for next season and calls into question whether his dynamic style of play can, or should, be continued when he returns.

It was the second time Griffin's A.C.L. had to be reconstructed; the first was when he was at Baylor in 2009. It is unclear how long his recovery will take, but the tear in the L.C.L. is considered by doctors to be a serious complication that could extend the time frame for his return well past the start of the 2013 season.

Dr. James Andrews, the highly regarded orthopedic surgeon who operated on Griffin — and is also a Redskins team doctor — said in a statement released through the team, "We expect a full recovery, and it is everybody's hope and belief that due to Robert's high motivation, he will be ready for the 2013 season."

He added, "The goal of his treatment is to give him the best opportunity for a long professional career."

Still, that does not make clear if Griffin will be ready for the start of the season in September, a timetable that might be overly optimistic. Minnesota Vikings running back Adrian Peterson tore his A.C.L. last December, was ready for the
