Self, Society, and the Modern World

Learning Outcomes

Students will:

- Use the constructs of power, diversity, and/or culture to describe examples of where, why and how inequities exists in modern society.
- Be able to frame a theory about the relationship between individuals and modern society.
- Be able to analyze central institutions and/or underlying social structures and their impact on the larger society.
- Be able to articulate an argument based on theory and empirical evidence regarding the modern world.
- Be able to analyze critically research and arguments about the modern world.
- Be able to reflect, in writing, upon their role in the modern world, including their relationship to their own and/or other communities.
- Be able to analyze social problems and public policies on the basis of ethics and values.